

The Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues

Early Career Scholar Opportunities

The Early Career Scholars Committee of SPSSI aims to connect psychologists who are early in their careers and want to use psychology to work for social justice and a better future.

Join a committee

The Society's affairs are administered in part by a number of standing and selection committees with specialized responsibilities, including the Early Career Scholars Committee. You can find the current list of committees by going to "Our Story" on the main page, then selecting "Committees and Task Forces". Please contact committee chairs or vadebusola@spssi.org for more information.

Submit an article

SPSSI invites Early Career Scholars to contribute to our Psychology Today blog. We also encourage our members to submit articles and reviews to any of our journals and publications. Please visit www.spssi.org/journals for more information!

Attend a policy workshop

Early career scholar members are invited to attend workshops designed to provide specific skills training to help them learn effective ways to get their research in front of policy makers at the local, state, national, and international level. SPSSI hosts various programs on Capitol Hill, including briefings, seminars, and other activities that provide SPSSI members the chance to discuss their work with policy makers and their staffs. Please contact smancoll@spssi.org for more information!

Apply for a grant or award

Early career scholar members are eligible to apply for a range of awards and grants recognizing exceptional contributions to the field of social psychology and encouraging new initiatives for research and further study. Several of our awards are designed specifically for Early Career Scholars. Please visit www.spssi.org/awards for more information!
